WHAT'S NEWS IN INSTITUTIONAL LIBRARIES?

PENDLETON JUVENILE COLLABORATES WITH PENDLETON PUBLIC LIBRARY

The Pendleton Community Garden Project allows Pendleton residents the opportunity to tend a garden plot in exchange for maintaining an adjacent public plot where food for the local food pantry is grown.

In 2011 the Garden featured 27 plots where plot-holders were encouraged to grow tomatoes, peppers, onions, carrots, and other products for their personal use and the community. The Read 'n' Feed program brought food and library service to people in need. A covered cargo trailer was stocked with non-perishable food, fresh garden produce, and library materials and made weekly stops at 3 places in Madison County.

Students from Mrs. Schmidt's Culinary Arts class at the Pendleton Juvenile Correctional Facility used garden produce to develop a recipe for salsa that would be sold to generate funds for the sustainability of the garden project. After several taste tests, the students chose "Sweet and Mild Cooked Salsa." Students prepared for production by peeling onions, boiling water to blanch the tomatoes (blanching makes it easier to peel the tomatoes), chopping the chilies, and measuring the spices. The ingredients were run through the processor, then cooked to desired consistency, and finally bottled. Students then delivered the salsa to the library for the final canning process.

Mrs. Lewton's art class designed the label that will be used for the canned salsa. The salsa will be sold to generate funds to buy supplies for the 2012 garden. The Sustainable Garden Project was a collaborative community effort between Pendleton Public Library and the Providence School Culinary Arts Department at Pendleton Juvenile Correctional Facility.

THE BIG READ

Here is an example of what resources like The Big Read guides and CD-ROMs you received in the spring could offer: At Logansport State Hospital a staff member commented to librarian, Brian Newell on how much she liked running reading groups where patients would talk about literature or characters in a story.

She said this was so much better than hearing patients complain about individual problems that could not be addressed in such a group!

So, start a reading group and find a way to put your Big Read collection to good use!
